Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Deeley house, situated on the east side of South Main Street in Berlin, is a 2- $\frac{1}{2}$ story frame dwelling with a gable roof and boxed cornice. The principal facade (west) is three bays across, the door being centrally located. The windows in the remaining bays and throughout the structure are 1/1 with the exception of two square sash windows marking the stair location on the north side and replacement windows in the north gable peak.

A hip-roof verandah set on brick piers extends across the front facade. Its original design (until March 1986) was half wall with square-tapered columns. Renovation included removal of half wall and installation of new full columns similar in design to original columns. Entrance to the verandah is via brick steps flanked by brick piers.

The previously mentioned renovation includes a large two-story extension on the rear, and 3" vinyl siding over 4" weather boards.

Much interior woodwork is intact, more specifically, the door and window surrounds featuring corner blocks and the stairway.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The Deeley house, although it possesses few distinguishing architectural details, is tied by its form and particularly its brick foundation materials and interior door and window surrounds to many houses built in Berlin after the fire of 1904. Its placement closer to the street than a number of earlier houses to the south also indicates the changes in house-building ideas demonstrated throughout the town by houses built in the early 20th century.

This house by its scale and placement enriches the historic district.
